|  | Creative writing and telling stories were always passions of mine. My characters are not based on anyone particular, but are collections of personality quirks I've come to experience. I try to make my characters real enough for the reader to care; they need to be more every day than fantasy for the reader to want to read and care about what happens to them. Each story should be a journey. | |  |

| Pinholster, Ginger | Expo Space:85 | Genre: Romance & Historical |
|  | Set amid Atlanta's natural wonders, Ginger Pinholster's debut novel, City in a Forest, explores privilege, racial inequity, and childhood trauma. It reveals family secrets as well as the friendships, places, and moments of comedy that give us shelter. Terry Kay (To Dance with the White Dog) says the book "often begs for the awe of a re-reading. The plotting stays in focus. The tease of turning another page never falters. Recommended? Absolutely. IndieReader calls it a breathtaking, beautiful novel. Kirkus Reviews describes it as a laudable story with robust female characters and skillfully woven themes of race and gender. |  |

| Taylor, Pamela | | Expo Space:84 | Genre: Romance & Historical |
|  | Set at the dawn of the Renaissance, The Second Son Chronicles tell the story of Alfred – the eponymous second son – whose grandfather, the king, foresees for him a special destiny. Each book is a complete story unto itself, but readers may find it most rewarding to meet Alfred in Volume 1 ("Second Son"), in which he comes of age in his grandfather's court and almost loses his life when taken captive for ransom. A history major in college and lifetime reader of historical fact and fiction, Taylor weaves a charming medieval tale while simultaneously exploring some modern-day themes. | |  |

| Horan, Stacey | Expo Space:59 & 60 | Genre: Young Adult |
|  | Stacey Horan is the award-winning author of Inland, a sci-fi thriller, and other young adult novels. Stacey writes about things that scare her. She finds writing about those things makes them a little less scary for her and hopefully for her readers as well. In creating her stories, she finds inspiration in the places she lived and the books she loved to read as a kid. Stacey's plan is to keep writing until nothing seems scary anymore. Stacey is also the host and creator of a podcast "The Bookshop at the End of the Internet" dedicated to helping book lovers discover new authors. |  |

| Savage, Nick | | Expo Space:65 | Genre: Young Adult |
|  | Nick Savage strives to tell uncompromising stories about the aspects of all our lives in fanciful, yet relatable, ways. His writing brings life to characters who reflect aspects of everyone around us. His stories touch on the human condition during hard times, exciting moments, and those rare, once in a lifetime events that impact us far after the memories of that occasion have faded. The realism behind even the fantasy aspects in his stories will give the reader a new way to see not only the world around them but a new way to look inward as well. | |  |
